I know you are still with us, I can just feel it. But it's been too long since I've seen that smile or heard that laugh. My heart hurts from constantly missing you. The barn isn't the same, the house isn't the same, none of us are the same. I miss you old man.

It's been six months today and it feels like a life time. I love you and miss you. "There is no moment of my life when you are not a part of me; You hold my heart; you guard my soul; you guide my dreams so tenderly. And if my will might be done, and all I long for could come true. With perfect joy I would choose to spend eternity with you."

It's been 147 days since you left. It's been 144 days since I last heard the baritone in your voice, 145 days since you last hugged me and whispered you loved me. It's been 147 days since you let go of my hand forever. It's been 145 days that mom has been crying. The house has been dark and quiet for 156 days, and I think it will stay that way forever. You were such a force of nature, such an amazing presence. You had the ability to make the world stop in tracks to see you and hear you. The gift to own a room when you entered it, to make everyone in it smile just because you were laughing & smiling. The world is so dim and quiet and empty now without you here. No one to own the room and make it brighter. No one to say that everything will be alright and make you truly believe it will be. Now there's just this constant empty ache in my chest that I will have to learn to live with forever. Like we are stuck in the dark for all of eternity, never to see another sunrise. You fought your ass off and tried to stay with us, even to the bitter end you hung on as long as you could. I know you didn't want to leave your womens, I know how much we mean to you, especially your grand daughter. So we will do what you would want and carry on, like Averys do. Your grand daughter is the only beam of light we have left in this darkness now. She will help us get through the eternal night, she will be the star we follow to find our way. She will never forget you, and neither will we. How could we, how could the world, ever forget such an amazing man.I love you Dad. Forever and always, I love you old man.
