R.I.P. bro, me and you went through so much the other. You'll be missed every day, but I'll always cherish the memories and the crazy times we had. In many ways I looked up to you because every obstacle that got put in your way you found a way to overcome it. You did whatever it took. We've known each other since third grade and I know I was blessed to have someone like you in my life he looked out for me as much as you did. You can finally be at peace bro. We'll see each other again

Ricky, you have been my best friend for over 10 years now. Without you I do not know if I would even be here today. When you passed, you took with you many of my secrets. Ones that will forever be only yours to know. We could always confide in each other. Years back, we would spend countless hours, and even days just walking the town all day and night and we could just talk and laugh the entire time. I miss being able to just be ourselves and act crazy and have such a great time even if it was just you and me at our own party. You've always been there for me and you knew you could call me at any time and I'd jump in my car and be wherever you were in a matter of minutes. You weren't my best friend you were my big brother. My literal family. I love you more than anything and I miss you more than anything. This has by far been the hardest thing I have had to go through, I think even harder than maintaining my sobriety; which I will continue to do now in your honor because I know you would not have it any other way. I feel a part of me is missing with out you. But I know you'll always be here. I remember you saying if you ever passed away you would "screw" with all your loved ones so bad and laugh so hard watching us. I know your already on your mission. I can feel you there, and I laugh when I can picture your reaction wherever you are. I love you so much. Rest in peace. Rest in metal. Rest in country. I know your always safe now ♡
